Beanie Baby giveaway from Wells' perfect game headed to Hall of Fame

Valentino the Bear Beanie Baby is headed to the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y., to join David Wells' hat as souvenirs from the pitcher's perfect game May 17 in Yankee Stadium.

Kids 14-under received the stuffed toy, which helped draw 49,820 fans to the ballpark.

Promotional giveaways usually do not go on display in the Hall.

"This was such an unusual coincidence and obviously had something to do with the incredible attendance," Hall of Fame spokesman Jeff Idelson told USA Today.

Believe it or not, various dealers have placed a price tage of $350 for Valentino. Geez, for that kind of money, one would think Valentino himself pitched the no-hitter.

X-Files franchise moves from tube to silver screen for Topps

By Kurt Samuels

"The X-Files is a franchise we want to work with. We'd like to continually develop card sets of all kinds to explore all aspects of the series to make it interesting."

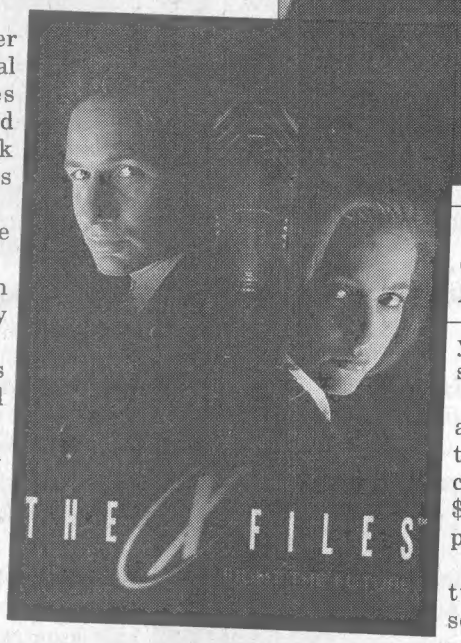
– Topps' Gary Gerani, 1995

Topps art director Gary Gerani hit the nail on the head in 1995 with the above quote, when he was speaking about the first series of X-Files cards.

As far as Topps and the entertainment card market are concerned, the timing couldn't be better.

In the ensuing three years since Gerani made that statement, only the strongest entertainment card licenses have survived. The X-Files is definitely one of the strongest.

In fact, the X-Files television show is coming off its best season ever. It cracked the top 20 in Nielsen ratings and essentially stayed there all season.



Gillian Anderson, David Duchovny and Mitch Pileggi attempt to answer many questions that surround the X-Files in the "Fight the Future" movie. (Photo courtesy of Topps)

The cliffhanger ending and several lead-in episodes have generated plenty of talk about the X-Files movie.

- What is the Black Oil?
- What's with this alien bounty hunter?
- Are agents Spender and Mulder related?
- What's with Mulder's sister?
- Does the government know about the existence of aliens or a possible alien war?
- Or is it all just a massive red herring?

The movie opened June 19 and answered most of these questions. While the maniacal level of secrecy isn't quite as high as that of Godzilla's "new design," very little has been leaked to Internet gossipers.

For collectors, the X-Files movie set should be another welcome addition to an excellent line of Topps cards.

Unlike previous series, however, this 72-card series is basically an in-your-face movie card set.

Slated for release at the same time as the movie, each eight-card pack will carry a $1.99 suggested retail price.

One subset features behind-the-scenes making of the movie, but the majority of the cards recap the events.

Some of the artwork hinged on the availability of key images, but the movie isn't quite as computer-graphic heavy as something like "Deep Impact" or "Star Trek."

"It went down to the wire, but we got some cool stuff," said Topps editorial project coordinator John Williams. "It was definitely worth the wait."

Card backs were written by John Rozum, an ideal match for the card series, not just because he writes the comic book series, but because X-Files-based myths are right up his alley.

Rozum's first big break in comics was Xombi for DC's Milestone series. The storyline focused on David Kim, "The man who could not die," but "I can't think of another show that has this type of mythology. There's an underlying plot line that's continually hinted at. There are constant red herrings, and things aren't always what they seem. The main characters don't even know what's going on."

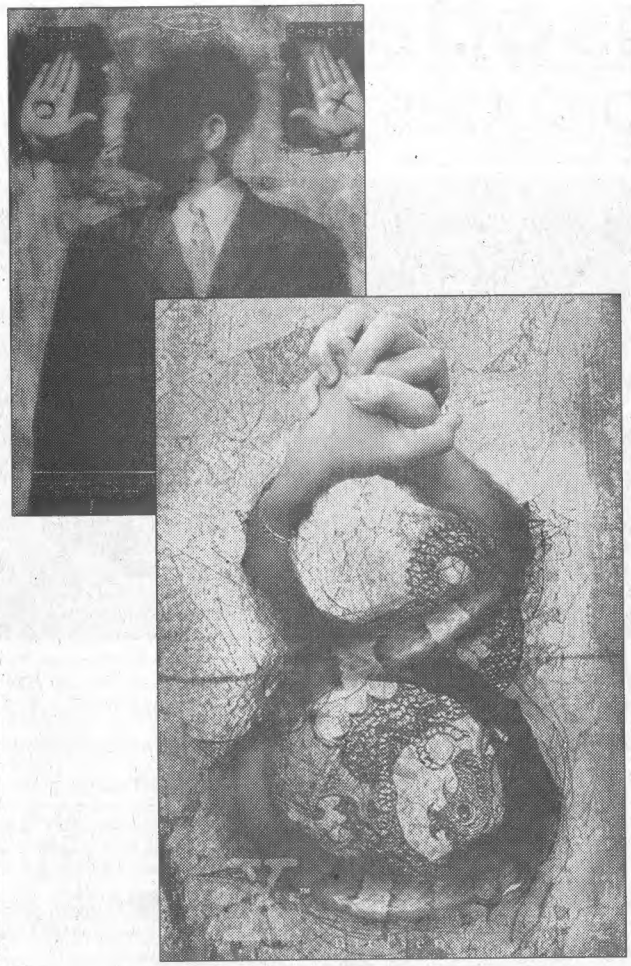
– Topps' John Williams



Artwork in The X-Files card series not only gives collectors an eerie feeling, but the cards also give a look at the X-Files-based myths.

quickly introduced some of the quirkiest characters and stories this side of the highly-acclaimed Sandman.

"The people at 10-13 (X-Files' production company) worked very closely with John Rozum. They have a lot of faith and trust in him," Williams said.

Rozum worked off a copy of the script and continually made changes as the script changed.

"There is some background of the mythology of the X-Files, not really a subset, but we address some of the elements such as the Black Oil and the Cigarette Smoking Man and list the episodes in which they appear," Williams said.

Unlike previous X-Files sets, the chase cards are truly something worth chasing. The headliners are the six different autographed cards:

William B. Davis (Cigarette Smoking Man), Mitch Pileggi (Skinner), John Neville (Well Manicured Man), Bruce Harwood (Byers), Tom Braidwood (Frohike) and Dean Haglund (Langly).

The latter three are the Lone Gunmen, Mulder's conspiracy-freak contacts.

The ratio is 1:72 packs, or one every two boxes.

The six-card Mystery subset is available 1:12 packs and features some of the more compelling images from the movie. The thermochromatic cards are initially black, but when you hold the card, your body heat removes the black surface to reveal the photo.

What makes a successful franchise? A good fan base.

Declassifing each of The X-Files card series

X-Files Series I, 1995: 72 regular cards, 72 foil-stamped mirror cards (one per pack), four Chromium cards (1:18), six etched-foil cards (1:18). Topps' first stab at the X-Files was everything a geek would hope it to be: episode guide, paranormals, production notes, comments from the cast and crew, and a season in review, plus painted interpretations of each episode by various artists. The one quibble is there was no reason for the 72 foil-stamped parallel cards to exist. We're not big fans of parallel cards. GRADE: A-

X-Files Series II, 1996: A superior set to the first series, because the episodes were that much better (the season showcased such characters as the Fluke Man, the Enigma from the Jim Rose Sideshow Circus in the "Humbug" episode and the alien bounty hunter, who assumes a pretty big role in the movie).

Technically, the series is an exact duplicate of the first, but the wealth of material made available to Topps supplants the first series as a must-have. GRADE: A

X-Files Series III, 1996: Focusing on the third season of Fox-TV's hit show, the 72-card set includes episode photos from the season, along with special effects, creatures, aliens, paranormal activity and behind-the-scenes information. In addition, 24 cards of original artwork was showcased in the set to give it that weird, eerie feeling. Series III chase sets Parallel, Etched-Foil, Holograms and Finest Paranormal. The set was a welcome addition to any X-Files collector. GRADE: A-

X-Files MasterVisions, 1996: At an initial release price of $40-50 per set (for 30 cards), this was one set that didn't need to be made. The set features paintings by Topps regulars Cliff Nielsen, Thom Ang and Miran Kim from X-Files Series I cards and from the Topps comic series. Unlike FPG's Colossal Cards line, however, there was no interview on the backs of the cards to discuss their art. In fact, all you get is a card number, artist and episode. GRADE: C-

X-Files Showcase, 1997: To keep things fresh and stay away from the dull routine of issuing a series per season, Topps decided to go back to the first season and highlight six ground-breaking episodes.

Each of the six episodes – "Pilot," "Deep Throat," "Squeeze," "Ice," "Fallen Angel" and "The Erlenmeyer Flask" – was featured on 12 widevision cards. Each card included four photos that were never used on trading cards. Topps gets two thumbs up for giving X-Philes a new, in-depth look at the TV show. GRADE: A

And what attracts that fan base? A TV show with strong characters and a central plot that constantly keeps its viewers off-balance.

"There's nothing else like this on television," Williams said. "I can't think of another show that has this type of mythology. There's an underlying plot line that's continually hinted at. There are constant red herrings, and things aren't always what they seem. The main characters don't even know what's going on."

Wayne, Connors, Autry lead 61 actors who appear in 'TV Cowboys' Exhibit set

By Tom Hultman

It seems many collectors have a soft spot in their heart for Hollywood cowboys.

In our May issue, reader Richard G. Wells of Houston, Texas, asked readers to help out with information regarding TV Cowboys postcards.

The way Entertainment Cards readers came forward with information, it's easy to see there are plenty of collectors who are into these Penny Arcade Exhibit cowboy cards.

According to Bob Marks of Cherry Hill, N.J., the 3⅜- x 5⅜-inch cards mostly run in the W412 category of the American Card Catalog.

In addition, Exhibit Supply Co. of Chicago produced three different sets in the 1950s.

Many of Wells' cards were part of Exhibit's No. 1 set, which is the most difficult set to assemble. Collector Edmond E. Morin of Dayville, Conn., said the set retails at approximately $125.

"At the time that they made up this index it wasn't all that specific and as a result, the second number on these cards were added in by the group of collectors known as the 'Penny Arcade Group,'" Marks said.

"It started with a W412-2 and that would be pictures of cowboys with salutations or greetings on them. Then there were the W412-3, which were cowboy pictures of stars between 1925-27.

"Then were the W412-11, which are cowboys from the 1930s. There's also a 412-15, which were primarily the television cowboys – Robert Conrad, James Arness, Chuck Connors, John Russell, Lee Majors, Lorne Greene, Dan Blocker.

"My guess is that's where a couple of these cards are coming from, particularly the Lee Marvin card. The Lone Ranger and Gene Autry cards came as individual things called the Gene Autry Series or the Lone Ranger Series. They really didn't bare a true 'W' code number."

Richard Topp of Yonkers, N.Y., said there is plenty of overlapping and double-printing in the Exhibit series.

"The earlier ones had the simulated greetings and signature on them (yours truly)," Topp said. "The later ones had just a name and also some had the name of the character he played – James Garner, Bret Maverick."

There are 61 actors included in the TV Cowboys checklist and a total of 76 cards. A few of the actors like Arness and Connors were showcased on multiple cards.

Most collectors agree the cards are valued at $2-$3 each, with Connors, Garner and John Wayne cards going for nearly $10 apiece.

"It's a very specialized area of collecting," Marks said. "You see them show up once in a while. Obviously, the ones with the better characters are worth more.

"In particular, John Wayne cards are very expensive. There's a different demand for them."

Originally, the cards were sold in machines in penny arcades. Both Exhibit and Mutoscope produced the cards. Eventually, Exhibit bought out Mutoscope.

The cards sold for a penny at first, then increased to two cents and eventually five cents each.

"Exhibit was a very shrewd company," Marx said. "This is the way they advertised it – two cents a piece or two for a nickel."

Thanks to Topp, Marks, Morin and Daniel Lirette of New Orleans, La., for supplying the information and checklists.

MARKET REPORT

By Kurt Samuels

A look at this summer's sets

'X-Files,' 'Zorro,' 'Small Soldiers' lead the way for blockbuster movie sets from card manufacturers

You know what's great about summer? Other than the fact that you can scratch mosquito bites until they bleed, summer is about the releases from the trading card manufacturers.

It's a time when these corporate executives say, "Forgive us for all the garbage we released this past winter, here's some really keen stuff for you now."

Here's a list of the coolest of the cool, what you should look for and what you should avoid.

Movie sets: Usually the bread-and-butter of the summer release sets, this year the new releases are thin.

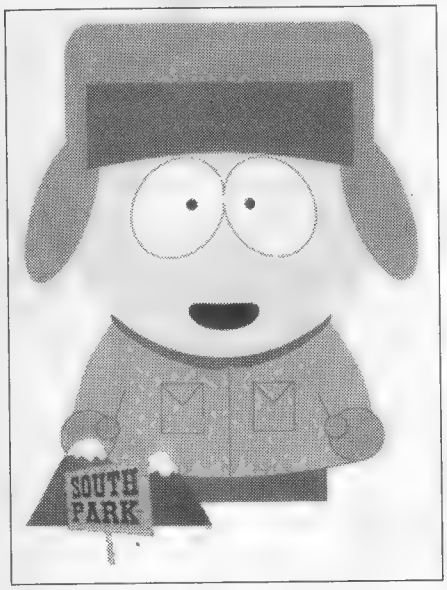
The big one, literally and figuratively, is "Godzilla." It's a monster so big, they had to make two sets to carry the beast.

Inkworks produced an 81-card set with three levels of chase, while Japan Printing issued a 90-card set that is a chase just to complete.

Both sets are done well (one collector said this is the most attractive set Inkworks has produced to date). And sales have been as good, though not on the same pace, as "Men in Black" from last summer.

If the movie has staying power in the theaters (it has slipped in recent weeks), it could squash the competition.

Just as big, but with more of a fan/cult card following, is "The X-Files: Fight the Future" film. So what if we don't know anything about the release, people are going to buy this set because of its premise.



"South Park" (above) could be the hit of the summer if it is released by Comic Images on schedule in August.

Comic Images is also hoping that sex symbol Antonio Banderas (above right) will be a hit with collectors when the "Zorro" movie set hits in June.

There's already a huge built-in audience. If the story line delivers, then the set will be the king of the summer.

Inkworks' other movie release is "Small Soldiers," which looks to be a "Toy Story" for Marines. This set's value will depend on how much of the younger crowd it captures.

The final release, "Zorro," will be the toughest sell. Antonio Banderas may be a stud, but not many women buy card sets.

Comics: Difficult as it may be to believe, comic cards are making a slight comeback this summer, with more sets being released than expected.

Fleer/SkyBox is leading the parade with Marvel 1998 Creators Collection. The 72-card set features the commentary by those who bring life to the characters.

The highlights of the set are the hand-drawn Sketchagraph cards featuring original artwork by the artists.

There's also an autographed card in every box. Is this enough to bring Marvel fans back to cards?

If superheros can't do it, how about females? Wildstorm, Sirius and Krome Productions bring the babes to the table with three separate sets.

Star Wars Prequel cards in magazine

Two exclusive Star Wars Prequel cards are polybagged with the Star Wars Galaxy Collector #2 magazine, which is produced by Topps.

One card (No. SW1) includes a photo of R2-D2 crossing an open plaza, while card No. SW3 includes production art of the Jedi Council Chamber. The magazine is priced at $4.95.

Wildstorm's Sultry Swimsuit set is a retread of what worked five years ago, drawing the comic book female characters in swimwear. It worked before, but that was when comic fans actually bought cards.

Sirius releases Dawn, James Michael Linsner's red-headed bombshell.

Dawn was a big seller for Comic Images three years ago. Will there be enough of those people who will come back for this set? From what I've seen of the promos, there's a chance .

Krome brings out another Lady Death set. With this release, there are more Lady Death sets out there than McDonald's franchises in the United States. Too bad Lady Death doesn't come with fries.

One last comic book series that may get some play is The Crow/Razor by OtherWorld. Fans may buy the set because of the much-anticipated "The Crow" TV series slated for this fall.

It's an all-art set, 45-cards total, with Crow creator James O'Barr handling some of the work.

Others: Comic Images may have the hit of the summer, though it may not hit the streets until the back to school sales. "South Park," that quirky cartoon on Comedy Central was once scheduled to be on cardboard back in April, but was pushed back to August due to delays.

Now the set will have to make it without new episodes to springboard the series. The series breakdown looks great, including a subset on how Kenny gets killed each episode.

We are ever grateful that Comic Images didn't do a Terrance and Phillip scratch-and-sniff set for this series.

Cornerstone goes at it again with KISS Series II, featuring more of the stuff that made the first series stand out.

Like X-Files there is a built-in audience for the set. Unlike X-Files collectors, KISS fans are reliving their teenage years through songs like "Rock and Roll All Night" and "Shout it Out Loud."

Unlike summers of the past, this summer in trading card land has more potential to fly because there are less releases scheduled.

For instance, Disney's summer movie "Mulan," is not being produced on cardboard.

However, less product also means less selection, and if nothing new released this summer attracts a collector's attention, there are plenty of places where people can spend their summer stash.

Disney: A "Mulan" card set may never be released, but that doesn't mean Disney sets are a thing of the past. On the contrary, next summer's Disney set is being worked on at this moment.

FPG (remember this company?) is working on "Tarzan" for next summer. While there are no details yet, FPG President Michael Friedlander said it should be an exciting movie and card set.

"It's a lot different than working on fantasy art cards," Friedlander said.

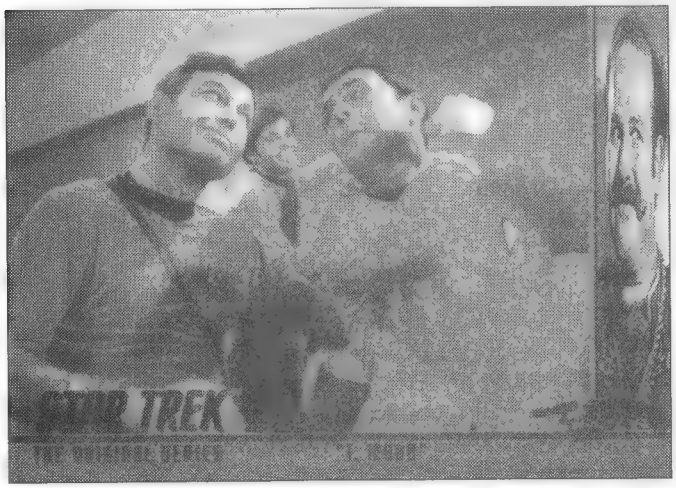
Getting wacky again: Do to overall wackiness from collectors, Phil Argyropoulos and Phil Carpenter are going to produce an updated version of their popular The Wacky Packages Handbook (see the March 13th issue of Entertainment Cards for story on the book).

The update is due out this summer. For more information, contact Carpenter at CalTech, MC 216-76, Pasadena, CA 91125.

Well, the sun is setting in the sky, and it's time for this teletubby to say good-bye.

But one quick note before I go. Fleer/SkyBox Star Trek: The Original Series II cards were being sold at Shinders in Minneapolis for $106 a box at the time of release (thanks to Andrew for this nugget).

Remember, this is not a week or a month after, but the day the set was released. I think it's time for me to sell a kidney.



Boxes of Fleer/SkyBox's Star Trek: The Original Series II cards were being sold at a store in Minneapolis for $106 the day the set was released.

Three-card 'Godzilla' promo sheet available at Media Play, Suncoast

"Godzilla" hasn't only invaded theaters and card shops, it has also stepped foot into participating Suncoast Motion Picture Co. and Media Play stores.

Inkworks has produced a three-card sheet exclusively for the media retailers.

The sheet features three horizontal cards – New York City residents running away from Godzilla, the monster's foot squishing cars in the streets and rocket launchers shooting at Godzilla.

The card back, numbered MP1, includes an ad for the Inkworks set.

For you promo heads, there are only three promos for the Inkworks Godzilla set: the three-card sheet, a P1 card that was given away by the company and distributed widely, and a "O" card that was found in copies of an earlier edition of Starlog.

Quality over Quantity

Fleer/SkyBox takes new approach to entertainment cards

By Rocky Landsverk

Fleer/SkyBox has taken a new direction with its entertainment card products, and it's one that collectors will enjoy.

The company, which has been part of the problem as opposed to the solution when it comes to entertainment cards, seems to have realized that collectors won't continue to shell out cash for the same old products, revamped with a foil stamp or silver coating. Of course, bankruptcy sometimes has a way of making a company rethink what it's doing.

From this point on, said entertainment director Steve Charendoff, Fleer/SkyBox will be putting real value into boxes of cards, including an autograph or a unique collectible into every box.

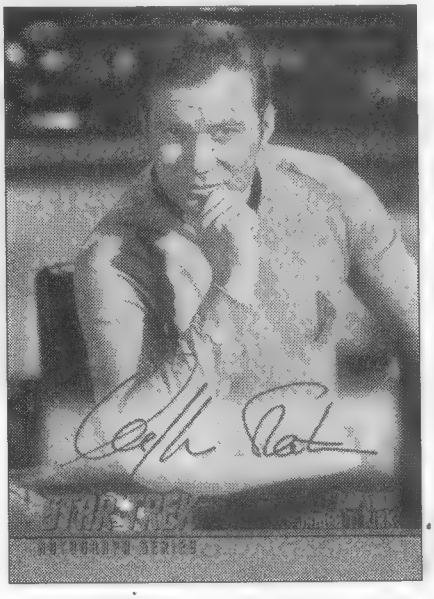
"We have guaranteed an autograph in every box of the Star Trek product, and going forward that should be the M.O. of our entertainment product," he said. "But more than that, we are guaranteeing it has long-term value. We have to treat this category with that much respect from this point on.

"Going forward, we have to look at this as a memorabilia business as well. Five or 10 years from now, I want these products to be meaningful and have collectible value."

Charendoff said that means "guaranteeing at least one meaningful value item, and I don't mean a gold-foil stamped special card or some foil-etching. That stuff is nice, but that can't be the pot of gold. Some of it may retain value long-term, but there's no predicting that. To say with certainty that an etched-foil, nine-up puzzle will have value five years from now is ludicrous."

The early results have been positive for the company. Star Trek Original Series II, 1967-68, has been even hotter than the first series from last December, and it's mainly because of an autograph in every box.

"With Star Trek Series II, we added more autographs than we had (in the first series). There were 32 people signing; the first series had 25," Charendoff said. "I've never seen an entertainment product generate so much interest. It's good to see."



Fleer/SkyBox increased the Series II production, but Charendoff said demand still far exceeded supply.

"The fun thing about this product, more than the demand from the hobby side, is that there's been incredible demand from the retail side, where we don't normally see any demand at all," he said. "We turned away almost all of the retail business, for two reasons. We see the essence of the business as being in the hobby, and just because this one product is hot, it doesn't mean hundreds of cases should show up at Wal-Mart.

"We have to walk before we can run. We made 22,000 boxes (of Series II), all of them numbered. I don't think it's an exaggeration to say we could have sold more than 30,000 boxes without skipping a beat. But we don't want to put too much product out just because we have one success."

Babylon 5 products have also been a big hit for Fleer/SkyBox, possibly because it's one of the hottest shows in the collectibles market. But Charendoff pointed out that a quality license isn't enough anymore – companies that thought they could take any hot shot or movie and turn it into a hot collectible without any effort have been proven wrong for years.

"The key is the product quality," Charendoff said. "It's not the properties that have reinvented this market, although Babylon 5 is a very hot property. It comes down to product quality and what retailers are responding to. And in large part, it's the autographs."

Surprisingly, Charendoff said the autographs aren't that difficult to obtain for those old Star Trek TV shows. However, when it comes to current shows like Babylon 5, the actors can be more difficult to persuade.

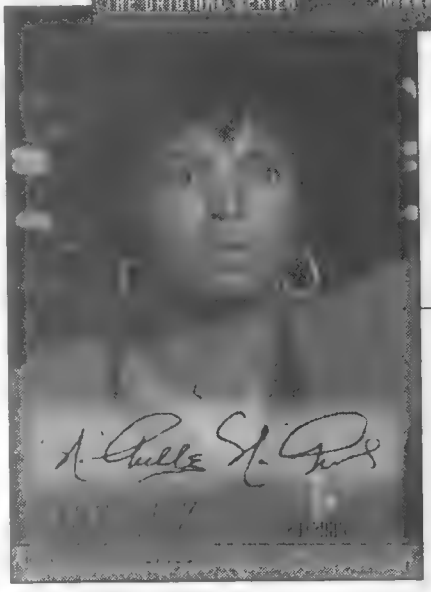
"Working with the actors from the '60s tends not to be as difficult as working with some of the cast members who are more current, because a lot of those '60s people are retired and their expectations are not as great," he said. "They're happy to be remembered."

Autographs are part of putting value into each box of cards, enough value to make it worthwhile for the collector.

"The method of determining the value of these products is on a per-box basis," he said. "A base set of cards – $10 or $15 at the most. In the Star Trek box, you've got a $40 autograph and a few gold plaques for $8 apiece. If the collector is going to pay full retail, $72 a box, so you need more than $72 worth of value in that box."

For instance, in the Marvel Creators Collection, out in June, each box has an autograph and a Sketchagraph. "The Sketchagraph is an actual hand-drawn sketch from an artist, and that's where the long-term value item is," Charendoff said. "The autograph is very nice, but it's not as big a deal because within the comic books industry it's easier to get those autographs. To get a unique piece of artwork is pretty cool."

And the artists went above and beyond when it came time to sketch those one-of-a-kind inserts. "There are some unbelievably good pieces of art here," Charendoff said. "Some of these guys took it almost too seriously. The intent was pencil sketches, and some of them actually painted these characters. We have everything from good-looking pencil sketches to elaborate watercolor paintings. My worry is that if Joe Collector pulls a painted piece, he might be disappointed with the pencil sketches."



On the first page is an autograph from Star Trek Original Series II. On this page, from top: Marvel Creators Collection, Star Trek Series II card and an autograph from Star Trek Series I.

Future products for the company include Star Trek Voyager in August, Babylon 5 Season V in September and Stan Lee presents Marvel Silver Age in November. A Series III Star Trek Original Series set based on 1968-69 is scheduled for December.

In all of those upcoming products, you'll see "value" items like autographs and original sketches. For the Stan Lee presents Marvel Silver Age, Charendoff has lined up eight artists, pencillers and writers from that period for sketches and autographs. "Stan will sign signatures and do some Sketchagraphs, even though he's not really an artist," he said. "But he's the grand-daddy of the characters. The drawings will be simple. He'll render some Spider-Man images."

Many collectors and dealers have been disappointed the past few years with entertainment releases. Like sports card sets, card companies are only now realizing that entertainment card products have to have quality if people are going to pay today's premium prices, and "quality" means something beyond cardboard.

"I'll argue this more vigorously than just about anything else – product quality and what you put in that product, the value that's in the box, is so critical. For (some other companies) to make the statement that (success) is all based on the license and you can put anything you want on the cards and that they'll sell, if that really is the prevailing sentiment throughout this business outside this office, then there is very little hope for this category," Charendoff said. "For better or for worse, we've established a very ambitious precedent."
